Report

The Department of Philosophy and IQAC of Mata Sundri College for Women organised a webinar on 9th May 2020 entitled "Intellectual Property Rights in Traditional Knowledge and Biodiversity". The webinar commenced at 12.30 p.m. with introductory remark made by Dr Manisha Mathur, member of IQAC, which was followed by the welcome address presented by the honourable principal Dr Harpreet Kaur who introduced the esteemed speaker Professor (Dr) Amar Singh, highlighting his eventful career in the field of education and the topic of discussion for the day.

The session was then handed over to the eminent speaker. He began by calling traditional knowledge and biodiversity rich economic resources and delineated on the meaning of traditional knowledge. The speaker then elucidated the denotation of Intellectual Property Rights and its importance in the field of biodiversity, the main tools of IPR being patents, copy rights, trademarks and geographical indications. The tools of IPR are designed to safeguard the interests of the preserving indigenous community.

The discussion then directed towards the regime of IPR that is contingent upon the nature of the economy and varies from one to another namely the capitalist system, the socialist system and the mixed economic system. In the regime, the final aim of the capitalist system is the marketing of IPR for profit making, while in a socialist system, the aim concerns the use of IPR for the benefit of the citizens and safeguard the interest of the primary stakeholders concerned.

The speaker then discussed the immanent politics of conflict of interest between the holders of traditional knowledge and the prospectants who are involved in commodifying traditional knowledge for the use of global market. He also outlined the objectives and purposes of global agreements on IPR such as Convention of Biodiversity (CBD) and Trade related aspects of IPR (TRIPS). He provided the audience with an assessment of protection guaranteed under these two initiatives. He also highlighted the practice of countries of global worth who are holding back several pirated patents of Indian traditional knowledge and enumerated some examples like neem oil patent held back by the European patent, turmeric patent held back by the USA patent. The speaker elucidated efforts undertaken by the government of India to document traditional knowledge by creating a Traditional Knowledge Digital Library (TKDL), however, he also highlighted the loopholes of the Indian IPR regime as found in the biodiversity act of 2002 which does not fully safeguard the interests of the indigenous knowledge bearers.

Having emphasised the loopholes, the speaker suggested legal improvements and required administrative action that would ensure the benefit sharing to the indigenous communities. As a conclusion, the speaker aptly noted the moral issues involved in strengthening the IPR regime of India and further the economic benefits that would accrue to the communities as a result of the strengthening of the former.

The session was then followed by the question and answer round moderated by Dr Hemlata Krishnani who prominently took questions of the audience regarding safeguarding the traditional knowledge. The speaker answered the questions while emphasising the idea of kitchen of the houses being a storehouse of tradition knowledge where one can find number of ingredients with medicinal benefits.

The question answer round was followed by the vote of thanks delivered by Dr Lakshmi Vatsa, teacher-in-charge, Department of Philosophy, who wholeheartedly thanked the eminent speaker, Principal madam, organisers and the audience for making the webinar a success. Indeed, it would be justified to say that it was an enriching and enlightening webinar.
