

COMMITTEE

SYSTEM

Committee System is an important parliament committee in India. India have proved to be the backbone of parliament power and autonomy. Department related to standing committee is a landmark development in this regard.

In the words H.M Robert, "A Committee is a body of one or more persons appointed or elected by an Assembly or society to consider or investigate to take action in regard to certain matters or subjects or to do all these things."

The history of committees in India began with the establishment of first legislature in 1854. The legislative Council (1854-61) appointed a committee to consider what should be its standing orders at its first sitting held on May 20, 1854. It was a four member committee appointed by a House of only twelve members. Since then committee system in India has come to stay and today each House of Parliament has its own committees.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

- (i) Committees generally carry out a number of functions covering a wide range of issues, which can be grouped under two broad categories deliberative and executive. Committee system as the watchdog for transparency and accountability and furthermore, it links the legislatures with the general public, by reporting on the failures of the government and forcing it to take remedial measures.
- (ii) The bulk of Parliamentary work involves passing numerous bills on various subjects. The number of bills Parliament handles in its day to day functioning makes it difficult for proper consideration. By using Committees, Parliaments smoothly carry out investigation, scrutiny and control of public accounts.
- (iii) Committees also influence the administrative process in a state. Going beyond their primary legislative functions, they give their views on various aspects of administration, thus providing a link between the law making (legislative) and the law implementing (executive) bodies. The committees point out the lapses in administration and help maintain a high standard of governance. Thus, Committees bring efficiency to the administration. They bring the government under control and at the same time save it from deterioration.

(iv) Another important function of Committees is to bring in specialised contribution to the functioning of the legislature. The Committees are constituted by pooling talents and experiences from all point parties in the House. Committees, in each aspect of Parliamentary proceedings, tune up the debate and enhance the efficiency. Thus, the committee system provides a very useful forum for utilising a great deal of varied experience and ability, which may otherwise go waste in the House.

(v) Number of issues comes to the Parliament for discussion and decision. Parliament is not able to handle them all as it gets overloaded. Committees share the workload although they do not directly discuss the matters of policy. The overwork affects the efficiency of Parliament. It is therefore in the fitness of things that Parliament develops devolves some of its work to smaller bodies while retaining the privilege of the taking major decisions.
